

Access Good Food and save costs with FareShare

What is FareShare?

FareShare is a national network redistributing surplus food from producers and suppliers to organisations that work with vulnerable people.

The Cyrenians Good Food Programme is the delivery partner in Central & South East Scotland and distributes 7 tonnes of food per week to over 80 members. This amount is set to grow and we are open to new members across the region and in particular the Borders.

Who we can supply to?

We work with Not for Profit organisations and statutory bodies who are feeding vulnerable people. We work with a wide range of member projects and examples include; homeless hostels, soup kitchens, residential care services, food banks, community groups, community lunches, youth groups, breakfast clubs, school holiday programmes amongst others.

What does it cost?

A membership fee is due which contributes to our running costs. Quotes can be given on request and relate to the volume of food that is accessed. Members usually achieve massive savings on their food bills with the fee being a small amount compared to the value of food received.

How does it work?

Each week we receive surplus food and this is fairly divided across our members subject to the food types they need. No food types or volumes are guaranteed but for some types we have relatively good continuity.

Members normally collect food from our depot in Jane St, Edinburgh or at a FareShare "spoke" point. In some instances we can deliver and there is a fee for this service.
